Jack Hitchner’s hauntingly beautiful poetry speaks to reflections of life honestly observed. His words move you from heartbreak, to healing, to hope with vivid, truthful imagery.

—T. Stephens, author of Dante’s Cypher

In Jack Hitchner’s Pieces of Life Between Latitudes, the poet takes us on a journey through worlds that may not exactly match our own, but somehow make us feel we have lived in them forever. Each poem takes you on a personal journey—one that honors the hard realities of life—and makes no excuses for any conclusions drawn.

—Cathy Porter, author of Dust and Angels

You can read these meditations on memory, nature, and family to bring comfort, and certainly there is pleasure to be had in the beauty of the language, but the poems are often unsettling. I read them as a metaphor for the state of America during these particular times of uncertainty. The title poem for this collection is one of the best poems I’ve ever read.

—Ernest Hebert, author of The Darby Chronicles

To Pre-Order: or send $14.95 check/money order to:
Encircle Publications, LLC, P.O. Box 187, Farmington, ME 04938
You may also order by e-mailing the author at jack.t.hitchner@gmail.com
Bookstore orders: 207-778-0467

John T. “Jack” Hitchner grew up in Pitman, New Jersey, and graduated from Glassboro State College (now Rowan University) and Dartmouth College. He also studied at the University of Bath in the United Kingdom. For over thirty years he taught English in public schools in New Jersey and New Hampshire. He lives with his wife Pat in Keene, New Hampshire, where he is adjunct professor of Coming of Age in War and Peace and Creative Writing at Keene State College. He is the author of the poetry chapbooks Not Far From Here, and Seasons and Shadows, the short story collection How Far Away, How Near, and the novel The Acolyte.